THE SOUTH CAROLINIANS

A PLEASANT BANQUET GIV-EN LAST NIGHT.

TWO HOURS OF AN INTELLECT-UAL FEAST.

The Tousts and Responses Happy Affair Thoroughly Enjoyed by Over One Hundred Persons.

The one hundred and fourteenth am ersary of the battle of Fort Moultrie was fittingly celebrated at the Swanna noa Hotel last night. The South Caro lina Society tendered a banquet to its in vited guests and over one hundred sat down at the tables. It was the first ban just given by this society since the one of 1887, so pleasantly remembered by all who were in attendance. The one of last evening was quite as enjoyable.

Shortly before 10 o'clock the party marched from the parlor to the dining room and took seats at the tables. The latter were arranged down either side of he room and were connected at the east end by a shorter one. On the walls were the flags of North and South Carolina. At the right of President Breese sa Lieutenant Governor William L. Mauldin of South Carolina, at his left Governo Taylor of Tennessee. In the bill of fare many of the heroes of the South State were remembered. The soup was of colonial camp style; the duck was served a la General Daniel Morgan, the salad after General Sumpter and the tongue after Sergeant Jasper. General William Moul-There were no cases in the Mayor's trie was remembered in the palmetto rice, is was General Francis Marion in the yams, La Fayette in the peas, Baron Steuben in the boiled onions, and Colonel Wil liam Washington in the potatoes.

At 11 o'clock the last course had been served and for two hours an intellectual feast followed which has never been excelled in the city. President Breese welomed them to the hall. "Gentlemen of the South Carolina Society and our invited guests," he said, "We anniversary of the battle of Fort Moultrie, and while to abler hands is assigned the honor of depicting its glories, yet 1 cannot forbear to echo one note which was sounded at the recent laying of the orner stone of the Washington Memorial Arch, when the orator of the day rising to the occasion said, "New York is justly proud in beginning this memorial arch. but does not forget that other American cities have their own distinctive patriotic renown." In Boston was rocked the cradle of liberty; in Philadelphia independence was declared and the constitution adopted. In Baltimore the continental congress sat when driven from Philadelphia and in Charleston harbor the great fleet of Sir Peter Parker was utterly dispersed and destroyed. Yes, gentlemen, on South Carolina's shores England's flag was first lowered and the proud sovereignty of Great Britainswept from her seas before the guns of Monetino. This, gentlemen, is a part of a South Carolinian's heritage and yet living as we do on the soil of old North Carolina we are also again at home, for to her alone be longs the credit of the original declaration of independence, and its confirmation by hose Halifax resolutions of May 12, 1776, resulting in the continental declaration of the fourth of July following.

"I claim that our society and this gathering represent history and that we are standing on historical ground. In the name then of a common heritage and in behalf of this handful of South Carolina gentiemen I greet you and bid you all a cordial and brotherly welcome.

"It is also my pleasing duty to give you the first regular toast of the evening, the day we celebrate and with it the State of it long live and prosper. The sentimen South Carolina. Aminis Opibusque Parati, (Dinna ve hear her slogan?) A mother whose shield and cause her sons are ever ready to bear and manitain." Hon, William L. Mauldin responded in a happy effort which was liberally applanded. He spoke of the regret he felt that his governor was not present to respond to the toast, and of his inability to do justice to it. A minute later and Esquire Summey and proved that the he had completely disproved the latter. and his speech was one of the most pleasant of the evening. Hefelt doubly grateful, he said, for being in Asheville. Years ago he was a resident. He attended school at Professor Lee's academy in Chunn's cove and it was in these mountains that in him was bred the love of personal liberty. He paid a glowing tribute to his old school master and branched off into the State of South Carolina, which he was perfectly willing to admit was the greatest in the Ameri can union. The banner of the State had been foremost in the Revolution, in the war with Mexico and thousands of her sons had followed it to their death during the late war. With a tribute to Jno. C. Calhoun and to the democracy he retired. Mr. E. H. Wright offered the toast. The State of North Carolina, with the sentiment "one of the original thirteen and the first to distinctly declare for colonial independence. Her unwritten history is a sealed book which when opened peoples her borders with a hospitable, brave and liberty loving people and reveals to the States a nobility of Governor Taylor responded. His speech was both humorous and pathetic. Of his state he spoke in the highest terms although to North Carolina he conceder the highest mountains, the prettiest hills and the fairest women. Of the resource of his state he spoke seriously and the attention of every one in the hall was his and when he paraphrased a famous expression, the star of empire no longer westward but southward takes its way the applause was deafening.

The toast, The State of Georgia, wa proposed by Major Rollins with the senent, "The youngest of the original thir teen now the Empire State of the South. General Young responded and although at the start he claimed himself as a stree paver and not a speech maker, he demor strated the fact that he could do the lat ter with eloquence. His speech was ad dressed particularly to the needs of the present although he did not forget to pay to the history of his state the credit due her. Of the record of the South in the last twenty-five years be was particularly proud and he had no faith in the advo cates of a new south. Mr. C. T. Rawls proposed the toast, The city of Asheville, our adopted home Her genius and development go hand in hand and mirrors to the South what native pluck, nerve and energy can wrest from mountain fastnesses.

In one of the best received speeches o the evening it was responded to by Mr. L. P. McLoud.

Mr. McLoud referred to the phenome nal growth of the city, and of its natural advantages At present, he said, and he was in a position to know, there was more capital here than ever before. When he had received the invitation to respond he said ie felt much like the Irishman who when asked to take a drink struck an attitude and looked heavenward. "What is the matter with you?" asked the friend.

Sure, I thought I heard an angel speaking," he answered in reply. That was the way he felt he said when he was asked to respond to the toast. He, however, felt himself entirely inadequate. From then on his speech was one of solid fact. He was in hopes that the navy would be improved until it should become what it should be. He was hopeful of the success of the new war ships.

Mr. T. C. White proposed the toast, Woman, with a glowing sentiment. Mr. J. P. Arthur who responded admitted that he was not prepared to speak to it. He had come to speak to the sentiment, The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world and that was what he intended to speak to and he did. He took the opposite and started out to prove it. The whole was the humorous hit of the President Breese was called upon to respond and he in turn called upon Colonel Hatch. The latter spoke shortly and with feeling. Captain V. E. McBee proposed the toast, "The Heroic Dead of the Carolinas. It was drunk standing and in silence. That concluded the regular toasts. Judge Fenner was called upon, how ever, and spoke of the last illness of Jefferson Davis. T. W. Capers made clever impromptu address. Judge Avery spoke briefly. H. T. King, of Augusta andled the streets of Asheville with bare hands, and with Captain Natt Atkinson the speaking was concluded.

Hull's cornet band, which had contributed largely to the pleasure of the occasion, played a march and the guests retired.
